

Cisco founder enters Insurtech and joins Upptec for continued product development and global expansion

We are pleased to announce that Cisco founder, Sandy Lerner, one of the biggest names in American business, now is joining the company's management team for continued product development and global expansion.

We now see that many insurance markets are ready for digital claim management. Together with Business Sweden, we have conducted surveys and assessments that form the basis for establishment in new key markets. We thus bring Sandy Lerner, one of America's strongest businesswomen, on to our management team.

– Upptec is right on-target for the marketplace and has a great track-record. I see great potential, it's the right thing at the right time. This technology has applicability in many markets, and these are markets with big players, says Sandy Lerner

Sandy Lerner is a great asset in terms of both product and business development. Among other things, she founded Cisco in the 80s and, over the years, she has established her position as a distinguished entrepreneur and philanthropist.

– I think I look at things a little differently than Upptec because I come from a background in large-scale networks, not the insurance industry. And, I've certainly got more scars, says Sandy Lerner.

We welcome Sandy Lerner to Upptec and look forward to continue providing the insurance industry with the most reliable digital claim valuation solution for home contents.
